IN MEMORIAM

In sad but loving remembrance of our dear mother, Mary E. Childers, who passed away one year ago, May 30.

May once more is here,
The saddest month of the year.
One year ago today,
Our dear mother passed away.

Hear weary hands and days of pain
Her troubled nights are passed.
And in our aching hearts, I know,
She has found sweet rest at last.

The old home now is broken,
No longer there we roam.
Mother's hands rest forever,
The hands that made our home.

—Her Children.

Processors Find Federal Inspection Pays Dividends

Four ten-thousandths of a cent! It's hard to imagine that small amount, but that's what food processing companies estimate it costs them to pay for "continuous inspection" in their plants. More than 100 food packers think it's well worth the price because they are able to say on the labels "Packed under continuous inspection of the U.S. department of agriculture."

Federal inspectors are on duty in the plant at all times while food is being processed, their work beginning when trucks of fruits or vegetables are unloaded at the plant. The inspectors check on the condition and quality of the food when it arrives, on the sanitary condition of the plant, the machinery, the work rooms, and the cleanliness of the workers. They also check on the food while it is being processed to see how carefully it is handled.

The job of continuous inspection doesn't stop with the sealing of the cans. The inspectors check on the temperature when the cans go into the cooker. Later, when the cans are stacked in the warehouse, the inspectors take out sample cans to test the finished product, about one can out of every thousand giving them a sample check.

The Bride Gets Away In This Fish Story

SAN JOSE, CALIF. — Durward L. Frazier, 25, sought to have his marriage annulled explaining his bride was gone when he returned from a fishing trip to Alaska.

Judge John D. Foley asked how long he was gone.

"Two years," Frazier replied. The annulment was denied.

Marine Admits Jap Bank Theft

Stole $38,800 While Posing As Army Examiner.

YOKOHAMA—Marine Pfc. Earl L. Brown, Clarksburg, W. Va., has confessed robbing a Japanese bank of 380,000 yen (about $38,800) while posing as an army bank examiner, 8th army headquarters announced.

The 19-year-old marine is being held here on a larceny charge after he confessed that he planned and conducted the daringly simple theft entirely by himself.

His signed confession was taken by criminal investigation division investigators under Capt. Otis J. Carter, Los Angeles, Calif., who said Brown carried forged papers that enabled him to convince officials of the Totsuka branch of the Yokohama-Koshin bank that he was a bank examiner.

The confession stated that Brown made a survey of the bank on March 12 and the following day returned and told the bank manager his funds would have to be transferred to Tokyo.

The manager placed the 580,000 yen in bags, and Brown, accompanied by four bank clerks who were acting as "guards," left for Yokohama by train.

At Yokohama they all got off the train and Brown took the money, put it in a waiting truck and drove off, saying he would be back in a few minutes. That was the last the bankers saw of Brown until his arrest early yesterday morning in a downtown hotel.

The truck driver, whose identity was not revealed, was absolved of all connection with the theft after Brown said he offered him 10,000 yen to drive him to Yokosuka without telling him of the robbery.

More than 400,000 yen have been accounted for either in Brown's possession or in hiding places he pointed out to army investigators.

Crumbling Palace

Northwest of Peiping, China, stands the 50 million dollar summer palace of the former emperor, built as a whim of his mother, the infamous "dowager empress." The structure has lost a little of its splendor each year as its gardens have gone untended and the tiles and marble have broken, and settled into the dust. Beyond the palace are the stately Ming tombs where emperors of the past are interred, while all around the city landmarks with romantic names in storybook settings stand beside evidences of modern enterprise. A commercial airfield is nestled between the temple of the sleeping buddha and temple of the azure clouds. Beyond the temple of the moon is a golf course.

Venetians Developed Ship Assembly 500 Years Ago

American shipyards weren't the first in history to put assembly line methods into shipbuilding. The Venetians made the gentry sit up and take notice with their techniques more than 500 years ago, Ships magazine reports. On one occasion Venetian arsenalotti—ship craftsmen — built 100 vessels in 100 days, and on another turned out a complete galley in two hours. Here's a traveler's description of a 1456 vintage assembly line:

". . . as one enters the gate there is a great street on either hand with the sea in the middle, and on one side are windows opening out of the houses of the arsenal, and the same on the other side. And out came a galley towed by a boat, and from the windows they handed out to them . . . everything that was required. And when the galley had reached the end of the street all the men were on board, together with the complement of oars, and she was equipped from end to end. In this manner there came out 10 galleys fully armed, between the hours of three and nine."

And in 1574 King Henry III of France visited Venice and watched a galley's keel and ribs grow into a vessel completely outfitted, armed and launched while he was stowing away delicacies at a two-hour banquet.

ROAN OR BAY?

A visitor at an insane asylum was stopped by one of the inmates, who seemed to be in a playful mood. He cupped his hands as if he were holding something in them and challenged the visitor: "What do you think I've got here?"

"A million dollars," guessed the visitor, eager to help.

The inmate stole a look at the treasure, the inmate answered: "No. Try again."

"A boat?"

Glancing again at his invisible treasure, the inmate answered: "No. Try again."

"A bathtub?"

"No," replied the inmate after another peek.

"Is it a horse?" the guest ventured.

Furtively the inmate eyed his cupped hands again. Then he looked straight into the guest's eyes and answered:

"What color?"
